Who knew? Back in 1990, the 20th anniversary of Earth Day, we were hoping for 5000 people to show up at Whetstone Park. Amazingly, 20,000 people came! It inspired Marilyn Welker to start Simply Living in 1992, and our 25 year journey to challenge the global consumer culture began right here in our own backyard of central Ohio.

Yes, it was idealistic to challenge a status quo that was all in for the “shop til you drop” approach to happiness and the good life. We started conversations about living sustainably by reducing our ecological footprint. We carried signs in front of Lazarus downtown to encourage “Buy Nothing Day” on Black Friday.

Challenging Business as Usual. . .

As John Lennon sang in his iconic song, “Imagine”, “You may call me a dreamer, but I'm not the only one.” In fact, dozens of local groups, nonprofit organizations, government agencies, social entrepreneurs, and responsible businesses have emerged to address social justice and environmental issues. From fossil fuel pollution to factory farms to off-shoring of our jobs, good people began to wake up and see that our materialistic culture was being driven by multinational corporations concerned more about their short term profits than the spread of poverty and income inequality here and around the globe.

Earth’s Immune System. Paul Hawken, entrepreneur and author of Natural Capitalism and The Ecology of Commerce, documented what he calls the earth’s immune system response to the ecological crises that we face. He identified tens of thousands of grassroots social and environmental organizations all over the world and compiled a NYTimes best seller in 2007 called Blessed Unrest: How the Largest Movement in the World Came into Being and Why No One Saw it Coming.

No one saw it coming? No, and even the people organizing did not realize that they were and are part of a worldwide, grass roots, bottom up movement to change “business as usual” – its broken food system, damaged ecosystems, income inequality, etc.

Join us Wednesday, January 17, 2018 6 - 8 PM

Simply Living will be joining in with Green Drinks Columbus at OH-4H at 2201 Fred Taylor Drive, Cols 43210.

We will be tabling, connecting, and networking with other local non-profits working to make Columbus a better, more sustainable city, all while enjoying light snacks and Great Lakes Brewing beer and other non-alcoholic beverages. Suggested donation $5 - $10 at the door. Bring your friends and family, and we hope to see you there!
DIRECTOR’S COLUMN

Imagine a State of Green.

We all do it on a small scale every day, right? If we see a business doing the right thing, we allow ourselves a moment of hope – telling ourselves “maybe things are heading in the right direction.” Conversely, when we see arrogant waste and abuse, corporate or personal, we may feel a tinge of pain and empathy for a burdened planet.

It cuts both ways in our hearts and minds, and in the world. However, there is extraordinary evidence of big picture Green Transition in the world as a whole.

Climate change – the great challenge of our time – offers great motivation for change and modernization. And not just an as environmental issue – the Green Transition is becoming core policy for competitiveness, job creation and human welfare in extraordinary and mainstream ways. Luckily, the green transition will be spurred by global market forces, not just changes in US policy.

Prices for solar and wind power are falling sharply and speeding the transition to green energy. At the same time, investors are increasingly turning away from fossil fuels.

In China, the government is not just driven by these declining prices, but also the risk of social unrest in their population from the heavily polluting coal-power plants.

Worldwide, energy buyers are becoming increasingly more interested in knowing what they are actually paying for. In 2017, Google will buy renewable energy to match the total consumption of its data centers and offices around the world.

Around the globe, investors refuse to put money into fossil energy projects. Even the World Bank will only invest in coal if there is absolutely no other less-polluting alternative. The world’s largest investment fund - the Norwegian government’s Pension Fund Global, which holds more than 1 percent of all registered shares - entirely rejects coal investments.

This burgeoning investment is breaking the barriers to phasing-in green technologies, focusing on solar PV and energy efficiency as areas for a green industrial future.

Dr. Hazel Henderson, futurist/author and former US government science policy advisor says “The green economy is growing faster than anyone realizes. We knew that this good news on the progress of the global green transition couldn’t be fully covered by mainstream financial media and news programs whose advertising is still from fossilized sectors.”

Maybe we are not hearing all the good news that’s out there . . .

Tim Nash, The Sustainable Economist, adds “Although the USA is expected to fall behind due to federal policies that put obsolete industries like coal ahead of thriving green sectors, large corporations are stepping up to invest billions in more efficient technologies.”

Let’s hope the Green Transition and real, fair economic competitiveness will encourage ways of achieving the change we need to become an ecologically sustainable society with a competitive, sustainable business sector in concert with the public sector.

Promoting the Green Transition and building greener economies is on the Simply Living policy agenda. How can we get active together to make it happen in practice? Check out the lead article to find ways to get involved. Welcome to the Fabulous Green Transition!

– With gratitude, Sarah

Transition Towns. About this same time in 2007 Rob Hopkins invented the Transition Town movement. Transition Towns can be any small group in a community or neighborhood or even just a street. What they have in common is a desire to dig in and make change at the local level, from the bottom up. They give voice to a green transition process without waiting for top down change efforts from government agencies and corporations.

There are 1200 transition towns worldwide, and about 170 registered transition groups in the US, and many more who operate unofficially. They start farmers markets, install solar panels, create local currencies and establish time banks. They encourage urban farming, advocate for renewable energy, promote bicycling and transit alternatives. They are planting seeds to grow the Fabulous Green Transition!

That’s the big picture, but much more exciting is to drill down and see what is happening with GREEN TRANSITION activity here at home. Simply Living serves as the Transition Network hub in central Ohio. Here are some snapshots:

In one neighborhood in Columbus, the Clintonville Energy Collaborative has adopted a mission to promote solar panels and their goal is to install at least one solar home on every street in Clintonville.

We have lots of farmers markets in central Ohio but the Sustainable Worthington group saw a need for a Winter Farmers market, so they established one a few years ago and it’s still going strong.

The Sustainable Delaware Ohio group started in 2009 as a project after one person took Simply Living’s Agent of Change course. Today it is still going strong and attributes its success to building relationships with the City Council, Ohio Wesleyan University, Preservation Parks, the Stratford Ecological Center, and collaborated with the Ohio Solar United Neighborhoods co-op yielding 45+ rooftop solar installations.

A local church created the Care & Share Time Bank to foster the exchange of services and skills for time credits. Today the Time Bank has nearly 300 members who have exchanged more than 15,000 hours and there are now 8 affiliate organizations, including Simply Living.

These examples are just the tip of the iceberg – there are dozens of organizations in central Ohio working from the bottom up to push the stubborn status quo in the direction of sustainability. They represent transitions across multiple systems from food, energy, and the environment to transit, business, politics, and the economy. See pages 6 and 7 to explore some of the cool ways you can get involved!

These organizations, and many others not mentioned here, are the elements of an emerging movement to transform our current business as usual into sustainable systems that, taken together, offer the potential to revitalize our communities, our democracy, and the transition to an ecological culture. But seriously, is the Green Transition going to be FABULOUS? Most of us understand that whatever the future holds, much of it will be deeply challenging. The challenges are likely to be disturbing, disrupting and perhaps even devastating. No one can say with certainty how systemic changes in our energy, food, transportation, political and economic systems will play out. What we can do is translate our values into the kind of future we envision for our grandchildren, and work for it in the decisions we make every day.

Ask yourself, how can I “be the change?” It’s really pretty simple, and you are probably already helping to make the Green Transition happen when you choose to support these alternatives to business as usual. As Bill McKibben says, we humans are pretty good at incremental changes. But for the first time in our history as a species, we are up against the physics and chemistry of global warming and climate change. We have to wake up and start changing ALL of our current systems all at once — connect all the dots in order to shift ASAP from the consumer culture to an ecological culture. Becoming eco-conscious means making sustainable choices in all aspects of our life — the food we eat, the energy we use, how we get around, buying less stuff, exercising our citizen muscles, and shopping, banking, and even investing local.

The secret to getting awake and staying awake, is getting active. At first it may seem like an obligation, even a sacrifice. But we at Simply Living guarantee that once you get immersed in this new game, all these new choices actually FEEL good. YOU come alive, you feel engaged, part of the solution, connected to your community, reconnected to nature, and with any luck you will find yourself falling in love again with your life. Now that’s fabulous!

LOCAL EFFORTS + WAYS TO GET INVOLVED

Food Systems

Local Matters worked with the Mid Ohio Regional Planning Commission to create the first Food Assessment in Franklin County and they are now funded by the city and county to implement a Food Action plan to address food insecurity and support the transition to eating healthy food. www.local-matters.org

Growing to Green — Columbus is now home to the National Community Garden Association. Under the leadership of Bill Dawson, the Growing To Green programs at the Franklin Park Conservatory have supported more than 250 community gardens in central Ohio. www.fpconservatory.org.

OEFFA — the Ohio Ecological Food and Farming Association, is a leader in the training and certification of organic farms and ranks 7th nationally, growing 31% last year. www.oeffa.org

Farmers Markets, Community Supported Agriculture, Urban Farms, Wellness Forum programs, grocery stores and restaurants offering healthy, plant based food are expanding their offerings every year.

Energy systems

Ready for 100 is a project of the Sierra Club that is advocating for a rapid transition to 100% clean energy with special focus on cities and mayors. The Central Ohio chapter is active locally. www.sierraclub.org

Clean Fuels Ohio offers a broad array of programs affiliated with the U.S. Dept of Energy but also offers individual memberships and hosts electric vehicle demonstrations throughout central Ohio. www.cleanfuelsohio.org

Our members have been pioneers for 25+ years in learning to live responsibly and joyfully on the earth. Today, Simply Living is a hub of the wheel turning communities toward a sustainable future. We have a broad vision to co-create “a compassionate and sustainable world through personal, community, and cultural transformation.” As individuals, we encourage voluntary simplicity. As a community, we advocate for localization to rebuild our local economy, our food system, and transition to renewable energy. As a culture, we promote holistic approaches to living in harmony with nature.

The global consumer economy is not sustainable. Business as usual is not sustainable. Simply Living attracts cultural creatives working to change this status quo. We are a nonprofit, grassroots organization affiliated nationally with the Transition Town movement and the Business Alliance for Local Living Economies. We are intergenerational and welcome people of all ages, colors, creeds, sexual orientation or gender identity.
