For the past three decades, Simply Living has been growing and nurturing a community of people concerned about living more sustainably. We have always questioned the materialistic values of the consumer culture, but more importantly we value a life that is “outwardly simple, but inwardly rich.”

Those words are from Duane Elgin, author of Voluntary Simplicity, the book that launched a movement whose message is now being widely heard in this period of economic disruption, climate change, and COVID-19. With so many broken systems and institutions, Simply Living’s vision to “create a compassionate and sustainable world through individual, community and cultural transformation” offers a path to a future that is not only sustainable, but where the quality of our lives will be greatly enhanced.

As the global consumer economy collapses as it faces the twin threats of the coronavirus pandemic and the climate crisis, bottom up movements that have been building for years suddenly offer the opportunity to reform and supplant failing systems.

• Regenerative agricultural practices and local and organic farms are poised to replace industrial scale monoculture and factory farm operations.

• Renewable energy sources, including community solar and wind farms, are now less expensive than fossil fuel investments;

• New economic systems driven by investments that benefit local and regional markets are emerging as global stocks and commodity markets are facing an extended depression;

• A comprehensive, global Green New Deal has quickly become a magnet drawing support for a de-carbonized future as well as for strengthening community safety nets – health care for all, public investments in education at all levels, a jobs guarantee to support a just transition, and even reforms to restore our democracy from corporate corruption of our political systems.

News of Living Simply in Complex Times

As this unusual summer slides into autumn we can take stock of the conditions that have resulted in such uneven economic wellbeing. The pandemic has disproportionately affected under-represented, minority populations, who are largely the same people at the front lines of “essential work.” Millions have lost jobs, many permanently, along with access to health insurance. Further, the climate crisis continues unabated, contributing to intense tropical cyclones on one side of the country and drought conditions that lead to fires ravaging the west coast.

These are complex issues, but a simpler lifestyle can make it easier to get by on less income and chip away at the greenhouse gas production that drives the climate crisis. Simply Living aspires to be an organization that can bring people and resources together to address these challenges.

Simply Living has been highlighting people in our community who exemplify living with lighter impact on the environment and society. We originally dubbed them “Local Heroes” but we want to stress the fact that these lives are not extraordinary (is that a hallmark of a hero?), but rather geared toward concern for others, and, frankly, the rest of Nature. Let us know how you think we should refer to folks trying to make differences large and small.

We recently hired Savannah Smith to increase our social media presence (Facebook, Instagram and Twitter) and continue the good work Rachel Schank, our previous social media director, did for us. Look for Savannah’s posts in our “Love Local, Live Local” campaign. We will highlight local bicycle shops, coffee roasters, bookstores, hardware stores, bakeries and restaurants, and help publicize the link between local businesses, increased employment, and retention of capital in our area.

Our lead article is on Simply Living Sustainable University (SLSU) has been around for a while but we are taking it to another level. Our partners in Central Ohio working to help us gain the skills to live more sustainably can draw on our membership and social media to attract participants in their classes. Education is at a crossroads, between Covid-19 and the attendant economic challenges, so remote learning and interaction may be the norm for a while longer.

We are in the planning stages of the 2020 Gift to be Simple (GTBS), which will be a virtual auction (planned to run from November 27th through December 5th). Volunteers are needed! Contact Chuck @simplyliving.org and find out how you can get involved.

We sadly accepted the “retirement” of Amy Ceccoli from the Board of Directors. Amy admirably served Simply Living for years and she will be sorely missed. Luckily for us she’ll chip in her skills (prodigious skills at that) on occasion as the spirit moves her.

From the entire Simply Living Board, be well and join us online!

– With gratitude, Simply Living Board
Simply Living’s mission to “provide education for sustainable living” right here in central Ohio is fully in tune with the emerging trends leading the way to a livable future. Simply Living has developed extensive networks and partnered with environmental organizations to:

• deliver our ongoing Documentary Films and Local Solutions series on diverse sustainability and quality of life issues;

• host 4-6 week courses produced by the Northwest Earth Institute on 10 interrelated sustainability topics;

• mentor community groups and neighborhood sustainability initiatives while serving as the Central Ohio Transition Hub;

• lead a coalition of community organizations and business leaders to advocate for local, sustainable economic development;

• convene community events to discuss sustainability issues and learn about allied organizations and local businesses;

• present workshops, presentations, and exhibits at local conferences and community festivals; and

• share news about learning opportunities and distribute information about local events that align with our mission through print and online newsletters, a weekly calendar of events, and social media.

Sustainable U. In recent years Simply Living’s Board of Directors has been developing an initiative to expand our outreach for all the programs described above that we call “Sustainable U.” Inspired by the DIY movement and so many projects designed to re-think existing policies and practices now seen as unsustainable, we envision the need for everyone to begin to prepare as individuals and as active community and neighborhood citizens, for the transition to a society that is diverse, and an economy that includes everyone and integrates sustainable practices into our mainstream institutions.

Sustainable U will serve as an umbrella initiative that showcases our own programs and will promote the workshops/classes/resources/goods and services offered by our collaborating partners. Together, Sustainable U will function as an educational hub to advance the goal of preparing central Ohio for the transition to a thriving resilient culture rooted in ecological awareness and values. Examples of topics addressed by Sustainable U will include:

Food

Urban Homesteading

Health & Wellness

Green Building

Banking and Finance

Energy Solutions

Transit Options

Ecological Economics

We believe this is the perfect time to reach out and engage the broader central Ohio community in co-creating a sustainable future. No one can predict exactly how that future will look and feel, but we are excited to be part of this critical time of transition.

Volunteer opportunities are also needed, valued and appreciated. Email Hello@SimplyLiving.org or call 614-447-0296.

To ensure the success of the Sustainable U initiative, the Simply Living Board has directed the Communications Committee to:

• redesign our website to showcase the Sustainable U initiative and our collaborating partners;

• expand our social media presence to increase followers and co-host virtual events with our partners;

• create a press release that promotes Sustainable U in local print, online, and social media outlets.

THESE LIMINAL TIMES
By Mac Crawford

We seem to be living in unprecedented times, although most generations would probably look at themselves and their circumstances and collectively say, “What the hell?” We do know for certain that there have never been 7.8 billion people on the planet though, so we can be secure in asserting the “unprecedentedness” of our moment. A word that is not commonly used, liminal, may help put these times in context for us. Here is an entry from a quick web search:

liminal: adjective
1. relating to a transitional or initial stage of a process.
2. occupying a position at, or on both sides of, a boundary or threshold.

Early in the shutdown for Covid-19, I began hearing this word and discussion of it in a few media outlets. Liminal events can occur in individual lives or within societies, or even across the world. The pandemic has taken over 210,000 lives as of this writing in the US alone, and each one of those deaths represents a threshold, a dividing line for the families left behind in the wake of loved-ones’ deaths. By the same token, the U.S. and most of the rest of the world will, for decades to come, refer to “pre-Covid-19” and “post-Covid-19” ways of life. As I watch TV programs (I know, so 20th Century!) and movies, I can’t help but react to depictions of crowds with a cringe at the “dangerous” behavior – too close, no masks! The economic effects of the pandemic are continuing to worsen and millions of families across our country, and the world, are forced to reckon with precipitous changes in income, health care access, mental health, and housing, among many other issues.

Recently, Rolling Stone ran an article entitled “The Unravelling of America,” by Wade Davis, and it made a few points that I think are spot on.

Frustrated with the abundance of one-use containers piling up? Then unsure if it can be recycled?

Beer is easily refilled, just take a growler to your local brewery.

Household products can easily be refilled, too, as Dr. Bonner and CommonGood know, it is not a trend, it is about sustainability.

In Central Ohio, City Folks Farm Shop and KoKo embrace that thought too!

Both have ways to refill your containers with essential household products, and both offer a wide range of sustainable household products.

Since its beginning City Folks Farm Shop has been refilling containers with a variety of products. It recently added Glenn Avenue Soaps to its offerings and are moving and expanding its refill area into its own room.

KoKo's, new to Columbus, is a refillery where customers can fill and refill products, over and over. [Columbus Underground story](https://www.columbus Underground.com) has great photos and details.

“Pandemics and plagues have a way of shifting the course of history, and not always in a manner immediately evident to the survivors. In the 14th Century, the Black Death killed close to half of Europe’s population. A scarcity of labor led to increased wages. Rising expectations culminated in the Peasants Revolt of 1381, an inflection point that marked the beginning of the end of the feudal order that had dominated medieval Europe for a thousand years. The COVID pandemic will be remembered as such a moment in history, a seminal event whose significance will unfold only in the wake of the crisis. It will mark this era much as the 1914 assassination of Archduke Ferdinand, the stock market crash of 1929, and the 1933 ascent of Adolf Hitler became fundamental benchmarks of the last century, all harbingers of greater and more consequential outcomes.”

So that word, liminal, whose first meaning above evokes a transition, has particular meaning for those of us looking for local, and global, resilience and sustainability: we are in the midst of a transition to a lower-energy, less polluting, more-socially-connected and just ways of living and doing business. As Paul Gilding said (paraphrasing) in his book The Great Disruption, humans will make the necessary changes to survive, not because we want to, but because we have to. There are so many great things happening in central Ohio, amid all of these converging crises (climate, pandemic, extinction, the broader environmental crisis, and economic and racial disparities to name a few), that I can’t help being buoyed by the mission and vision of Simply Living, and, by extension, our Transition Hub. We exist to bring people together; facilitate conversation; raise consciousness through films, books and presentations; and to seek out guidance on navigating this ecological bottleneck for ourselves and our members. Simply Living Sustainable University (SLSU), the Transition Hub and the activities of all of our friends and allies will be part of the answers to the troubling questions we face. We look forward to hearing from and working with you to find our way through. Remember, crisis is opportunity!
